

HAWAIIAN SINGER MAKING A HIT

A Hawaiian boy is making a prominent name for himself in the Eastern cities in musical circles. Akoni Kia, brother of Benjamin Zablan, clerk of the police court, whose vocal attainments are well known here, is now traveling over the vaudeville circuits in the Eastern states, earning good salaries and making a fine impression.

Two songs which he is now singing on the vaudeville circuit are being featured for him under the auspices of the publishers, Howard A. Hill of Chicago. One is "Wait," the words by Horwitz and the music by Bowers, and the other is "I Wonder," the words and music by Harry Pringle. Akoni Kia's picture adorns a portion of the front page, in which he is shown wearing a large lei about his neck and holding an ukulele. At the top of the cover are the words: "As featured by the World-Famous Hawaiian Tenor Akoni Kia, former court singer, Hawaii."

Last year Kia formed one of a quartette of Hawaiian singers back East, Baker and July being two other members. Kia has a beautiful tenor voice of fine quality and is especially adapted to sentimental ballads. He sings equally as well as in Hawaiian. Letters received from people who have heard him say that the Hawaiian has made a greater hit on the vaudeville stage than any one else in the past five years.
